

Upstanding UROP student logs
20 minutes of work as 3 hours
instead of 6

"I think I work on my project as much as the average MIT student" he said Monday at 4:57PM, while filling in last week's timesheet just minutes before the deadline. He stated that he thinks he is an "excellent role model for kids, even the girls, in STEM" by only exaggerating his hours by 800% instead of 1700%. When asked about the project timeline he said, "I'm on a good track to finish the work by May, or maybe June, of 2032."

Three students dead after five scooter pile-up in infinite

Following the death of three beloved students, MIT administration is heavily considering adding separated pedestrian lanes and high speed scooter lanes in the infinite.
