MOUNT KOSCIUSZKO

I love trekking out in the (1), but it was almost time to go home. I looked around at my campsite. No (5) would be coming way out here; I'd have to take care of the trash myself. A (4) hopped by in the distance just as my (1) started to whistle. I took it off the fire and poured myself a cup. I figured I'd pack up my (2) right after I grilled something on the (3) for lunch.

A few days later, I was leaving the pub with a (4) – a bloke gets thirsty, you know. Even though I love camping, it was good to be back in the (5). I can't get enough of the nightlife; it's just (5)! My roomie's a (3), so he never comes out with me. At least he finally fixed the car; it was (4) before I went camping. We had a whole (1) about it, and I stormed off in a huff. Don't get me wrong; he's not a bad guy. He was a (2), and I respect his service. He just wants to work hard, settle down, pop out an (2) or two. I'm sure he thinks I'm a total (5), but that's fine. Stress is for other people.

THE CHILLING CONCLUSION

Now that you've been up and down and up and down . . . it's time to look within.

The twelve mountains you visited (which were presented in no particular order) have each been beset by brutal winter weather. There are three different kinds of storm fronts—one that appears before three of the mountains, one that appears before four, and one that appears before five. Of course, not everything you found on the mountains fares well in the cold, so you're going to have to chip away at what you've got and keep only the parts that are weather-ready.
